Child Internet Safety Class Being Offered by NPBPd

Almost all children today have access to the Internet through schools, libraries, community centers, or their home. Children are using the internet more than ever before. Many schools incorporate the Internet into their curriculum and encourage online research for projects. But that's not all kids are doing online. They also email, chat with friends through instant messenger and in chat rooms, play games, create websites and web blogs, and just surf the net.

Even as kids grow savvier in their use of the Internet, it can still be a dangerous place. The good news is that most dangers can be avoided if children and their parents learn about smart Internet use. The North Palm Beach Police Department is partnering with the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children to present an Internet Safety Class for parents and youth ages tween-teen. The presentation will be held at the North Palm Beach Library in the Obert Room on March 12, 2015 at 5:00 p.m.
